The National Park Hospitality Association (NPHA) and Sysco Corporation invite you to attend a one-day seminar and product showcase on September 19, 2012 at the Sysco Denver Food Show. Their Denver Food Show is one of their largest annual events, with more than 90 percent of the company's suppliers in attendance, as well as more than 300 vendors.

This NPHA event is designed to increase awareness of the healthy products that are available through national park concessioners, while broadening the understanding of the National Park Service Healthy and Sustainable Food Program. Participants will also have ample time to visit the Denver Sysco Food Show floor, to speak with suppliers and sample products.

Presentation topics will include:

- An overview of the National Park Service Healthy and Sustainable Food Program
- Sysco support, including menu planning and meal nutritional evaluation tools
- Understanding domestic and international visitors' food preferences
- Marketing and merchandising healthier food options to today's national parks visitor
- Sustainability/nutrition/wellness ratings: Trends in helping people make choices
- Working with local suppliers

The National Park Service and its concessioner partners are committed to supporting healthy lifestyles in America by offering and encouraging healthy food choices. The NPS and its concessioners have worked to develop minimum standards for healthy foods in parks and to find ways to highlight the availability of nutritious food and its benefits. Choosing healthy foods will reflect a change in the buying habits for many park visitors, but successful efforts to promote this selection, coupled with success in making the healthy food enjoyable, can help encourage better food choices long after a park visit.
